

January 2010

FedEx team members are deeply saddened by the devastation caused by the January 12 earthquake in Haiti. The thoughts of everyone at FedEx are with the victims, survivors and loved ones affected by these disasters.

At the present time, FedEx is not able to accept relief shipments of aid collected by individuals or local organizations. We are encouraging our employee base to provide monetary support rather than collections due to the logistical challenges at the disaster sites.

The best way to assist the Haitian people recover from this disaster is to donate monetary support to a legitimate charitable organization. FedEx is providing more than $1 million in cash and in-kind support to several global charities. In fact, over this past week FedEx operated several relief flights into Haiti on behalf of organizations that include the American Red Cross, the local Red Cross, Heart to Heart, Direct Relief International, and Water Missions.

Sincerely,

FedEx Express
